Becoming a Learning Team

Implementing a Cycle of Continuous Improvement

Teacher collaboration is at the heart of professional learning. This six-week online course examines a framework for teacher collaboration that focuses on educators identifying student learning challenges and working meet their own and their students' most urgent learning needs through collaborative professional learning. Based on Learning Forward's book Becoming a Learning Team and grounded in the Standards for Professional Learning, this course will provide step-by-step guidance to maximize collaborative learning time for teachers by implementing a five-stage cycle and examining the conditions and contexts that drive effective teacher collaboration.

Participants will examine, practice, and share results of a learning team process for using student data to craft student and educator learning goals; using those goals to develop learning plans; implementation steps; and progress monitoring, while focusing on the role of learning teams in implementing high quality instruction and what that means for student and educator learning.

Course activities begin on September 24, 2024.

The cost is $749 for Learning Forward members and $799 for non-members.
